DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Murder of an Aged Miser and His Wife at Havana.

They Assumed an Immense Fortune by Living on One Meal of a Single Dish a Day.

HAVANA, Oct. 17.—The particulars of the double tragedy here, of which an outline has already been furnished, are as follows: Senor Domingo Sanudo, a well-known real estate owner, and his wife, Senora Mercedes, were found dead in the back parlor of their residence, their bodies having been horribly mutilated by the murderer with a little axe, which had been left on a table near the bodies. The victims were respectively eighty-six and sixty-eight years of age. They had spent their lives in amassed a fortune, which had been made chiefly through an "excessively frugal and restrained mode of living. Their wealth is estimated at $2,000,000 in round numbers. They owned eighty-six houses. They leave only one daughter, whose husband has been arrested on suspicion of being connected with the crime. The old couple had of late become so fearful of being robbed that they did not keep a servant, opened their door to inmates of the house only, and received large sums due them through iron bars. They seldom left their homes, and were, so to speak, their own jailors. They took but one meal a day, and that was reduced to a single dish. Their house is at 19 Iniquidad street. The interior has the appearance of a castle, if not a jail. The only entrance or exit was by one door, and this was securely bolted. The police had to break open a window (there were only two in all) to get at the mutilated corpses. The murderer is unknown and did not leave a trace of himself; nor did he apparently touch any thing in the house. Excepting the quantities of money found, amounting to thousands of dollars, the contents of the house were very poor and exceedingly dirty. Senora Maria Regla, the daughter, and her husband, Juan Simon, reside in a house adjoining that in which the tragedy occurred. They were married some twenty years ago against the wish of the old people. Simon was on bad terms with his wife's parents, but there is no proof against him. A servant of Simon was also arrested.

A BUNGLER'S DISCOVERY.

Method of Making Wood Absolutely Fireproof.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 17.—In the course of conversation at Cornell University Saturday, Edward Atkinson, the Boston economist, stated that a New England genius had recently discovered a cheap method of dissolving zinc by combining it with hydrogen and producing a solution called zinc chloride. This liquid, if applied to certain woods, notably white wood, makes it absolutely fireproof and at a low cost. Mr. Atkinson regards this discovery one of the most important of the age, and one that will surely revolutionize fire insurance as well as immensely decrease the loss by fire. The invention is kept secret for the present. Only one foreigner—Sir Lyon Playfair, the English scientist—knows of it. He corroborates all that is claimed for the invention, and says that the inventor is a bungling chemist, but that he has the faculty of blundering into the choicest secrets in nature's laboratory. As soon as patents are perfected and capital interested, zinc water will become an article of commerce.

A West Shore Tunnel Collapses.

NEWBURGH, N. The West Shore will use the Erie track in the meantime.

WHITECHAPEL MURDERER.

Sends One of His Pursuers a Fried Kidney of a Woman.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The news of absurd theories, false clues and unlimited arrests of wrong men, which have almost turned pursuit of the Whitechapel murderer into a burlesque, was relieved to-day by a genuine sensation. George Lusk, a builder, is the head of the Whitechapel Vigilance Committee. Late Tuesday night the parcel post delivered and left a box at his house. Upon opening it he discovered a neatly wrapped substance which smelt very strongly, and which he judged to be a half kidney belonging to some animal. Inclosed in the box was the following letter: "I send you half the kidney I took from one woman. I preserved it for you. You better piece I fried and ate. It was very nice. I may send you the bloody knife that took it out if you only wait a while longer." Lusk at first regarded it as a joke, but, remembering that the left kidney was taken from Edwina, the Mire Square victim, he took the box to London Hospital. Dr. Openshaw examined it yesterday and said: "It was certainly a half left kidney of a full-grown woman, divided longitudinally. To-day the box and letter were taken to Scotland Yard, and detectives are trying to find out what postal district parcel delivered it. The hand-writing of the letter is in the low, hoarse, raspy manner of the hand-writing of letters from Jack, the Ripper, some weeks ago."

TOO HOMELY TO LIVE.

Distressing Suicide of a Kansas City Woman of Twenty-seven.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 18.—Julia Beck, of this city, good-looking, bright, admired by many and well-to-do, thought that she was too homely to live, and committed suicide yesterday by taking three-quarters of a pound of chloroform. She was twenty-seven years old, and ever since she was seventeen she had imagined herself so ugly as to cause comments whenever she appeared in public. She rejected several offers of marriage on this account, telling her admirers that she could not disgrace any man. Recently she had begun to try to improve her imagined ill looks in many ways, and about a week ago she had her teeth pulled out, though they were sound and white and not very irregular in order to improve her mouth. Many of her friends had tried to dissuade her on the strange idea, but each effort in that direction made her more angry. In a letter she left her mother she said she was tired of her homely face, and had lost all interest in her new teeth.

HOW HOLCOMB STOLE.

Auger-Holes Which Let the Golden Grain Into His Mine—A Simple Plan That Wrought Wealth and Ruin.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 18.—It was learned to-day how Holcomb, the wheat thief who slipped over to Canada with a big load of wheat, acquired his wealth. One of the elevator men said: "Holcomb had a bin of his own in the elevator. It is located below the other bins, and near the railway track. The cars are loaded through chutes connected with wheat bins. Harry took one of the boards from one of these chutes, and put on another in its stead. The board which he put on had an auger hole in it, and all the time during loading process wheat continued to pour down into Harry's bin through this auger hole. When he had enough, he obtained his load of wheat, and it was hauled to market. I don't know just how much Harry actually made by his take-off. He had to divide up with others in the deal, and I think he made about $50,000 all told."

PAYMASTER AMBUSHED.

Caught in a Lonely Ravine With a Large Sum of Money.

When the Shots of the Assassins Do Their Deadly Work—Pursuers Searching With Hope in Hand.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Oct. 18.—The Lehigh Valley railroad is building a branch road which leads near Miners' Mills, and in the construction Contractor McMadden has under him Italian workmen of the roughest class, and near the Mills a double murder has been committed. The spot where the murder took place is in the center of a wild and lonely district, and the thickly wooded hills afford an almost impenetrable shelter for the assassin. J. B. McClure, Contractor McMadden's paymaster, was on his way to pay off the men when the crime was committed. Only a single narrow road, bordered by overhanging trees, leads from the little village of Miners to the place where the man was at work. Paymaster McClure carried $25,000 with him in three bags. He was accompanied by Alexander McQueen, who acted as body-guard. Both men were well armed and had no thought of any special danger. Just as they had turned a bend in the road a well-aimed shot came whistling from an ambush among the trees and McClure fell from his horse. The body-guard, startled by the suddenness of the attack, hesitated a moment, and the delay, though only momentary, was long enough to give the concealed assassins the advantage they needed. Three more shots completed the deadly work. One sent poor McQueen headlong from his plunging horse, and the other killed the horses. The whole affair must have been accomplished so quickly and dexterously that the men had no time to defend themselves. The money is gone. Paymaster McClure and McQueen were young Irishmen, and were very well and favorably known in Wilkesbarre. McClure was engaged to a young lady of this city, and was to have been married a week from next Tuesday. The men who are hunting the murderers are hunting their rope in hand.

New Sirel Car Motor.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—Yesterday a test was made at Pullman of a new test car motor. It is the invention of W. H. Patton, of Pueblo, Col. A gas engine is used, which automatically by one stroke of the piston the gas required for the following stroke. The gas is made from gasoline, oil or crude petroleum, and mixed with air and compressed in the cylinder. Its action is similar to that of steam. After the piston head is forced back the product of the explosion—hot air—leaves the cylinder of the engine through an exhaust pipe. Yesterday's test was made with an eight-horse-power engine. From the engine power was transmitted to friction wheels—one of paper, the other of iron—by means of a rope cable. The inventor claims that it is capable of a speed of fifteen miles per hour, at a cost of less than one dollar per day; that it is cleanly, being without smoke, and noiseless.

MYSTERIOUS MURDERS.

The Mangled Remains of Four Negroes Found Within Two Weeks, but No Clue to the Murderer.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Oct. 21.—The people of Tuscaloosa, a small town fifty-six miles southwest of this city, are excited by the mysterious murder of four colored people within ten days. The first victim was John Hill, a respected mechanic, who was supposed to have been murdered for his money. His dead body was found on the street one morning with his throat cut and fifteen knife wounds on the body. Last Monday the body of an unknown colored man was found in the woods a few miles from town, and on Friday the body of the third victim was found in the river near by, the throats of both having been cut from ear to ear. This morning the body of the fourth victim was found in the woods near town. The officers have so far been unable to obtain any clue to the perpetrators of the crime. The body found this morning has not yet been identified. All the victims had their throats cut. With the exception of the first one, the bodies showed no other marks of violence. The colored people of the town have been frightened out of their wits by these crimes.

IMITATES A SNAKE.

Singular Effect of the Bite of a Rattlesnake on a Young Colored Boy.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Oct. 21.—Jerry Dargin, a five-year-old colored boy, while playing in the yard four months ago, was bitten by a small rattlesnake known as a ground rattlesnake. The boy seemed seriously affected by the bite, but finally improved, and was soon able to run about the yard. Recently he began to show signs of a peculiar ailment. Every time he got out in the yard he lis down with his face to the ground and crawls along, trying to imitate the motions of a snake. When left alone he will crawl along on the ground until he finds some place where he can conceal himself, and there he will remain in hiding until his parents find him. When angered the boy does not cry, as he formerly did, but makes a peculiar hissing noise similar to the hiss of an angry snake. The veins in his neck, face and forehead swell to enormous dimensions, such as, his eyes assume a greenish hue, and remain that color until he recovers from the attack.

CHAPTER XVIII.—CONTINUED.

"She's been doing her prettiest to make up a match between my girl and that fellow Borman. She's not the least in love with him, though. Childer may think so; he's been blind as a bat to see her drift all along. I want her to know that I won't put up with any interference from her. She has always treated me like the mud under her feet, but now she's got to take me on an equal footing with her. I don't care, but she's got to know that I won't be without absolute rudeness, refuse to let her go."

Lyman came to the rescue by telling his sister to get her wraps. He had declared once that they must break off their friendship for the Everleighs, but he could not resist the temptation to offend him, though he mentally determined that it should be for the last time, nor could he, without absolute rudeness, refuse to let her go.

He tucked the two girls into the sleigh and handed the robes around them, promising easily to be with them within half an hour. When they were fairly off, Althea turned to look her companion severely in the face.

"What did that man mean by his talk, Carol? Surely you have not raised him anything to give him reason to speak as he did. I want you to be frank with me, for I have been giving hope to another lover of yours, quite unwarrantably, if there is any thing in this."

Carol held up the hand on which flashed Ingot's gift.

"This is from him, Althea."

"Add you have given up Norris for this man—I never would have believed it. I can not believe it now. What can you see in him, coarse, vulgar, no more to be compared with—oh, Carol! what have you done!"

"My duty, I hope," murmured Carol, in heart-broken tones, "but I have believed in him. I'm afraid I shall cry, and Lyman hates to see me with red eyes. Oh, Althea! I am unhappy, and it will be worse if you are angry with me. We can be friends just the same, can we not?"

"With that man between us! I doubt it. But at any rate I can't afford to quarrel with you to-night. Here we are, and there are my visitors, wondering what has become of me."

It was a miscellaneous party Miss Everleigh had gathered in, whether from some passing whim, or a growing thoughtfulness and charity which believed in bringing these starved lives within the light and color of her own. There were about twenty boys and girls of varying sizes and degrees of raggedness, two or three bent and wrinkled crones, and a pale, pretty girl of twenty, who was telling the story of the Glass Slipper to such as chose to give their attention to her.

"Cinderella had no trouble in putting it on, so she married the prince, and—Tommy Burke, if you throw another peanut shell, I will see that you get no orange to take home to-night. Meggy, what are those two midgits quarreling over? You can't bring that pip into here, granny! Miss Everleigh would not like it. Ask the girl for another cup of tea if you want to bring up your nerves. Now, young man, I caught you pulling Sissy Darko's hair. Aren't you ashamed, when you were asked here, like a gentleman, just to show your worst? What is this? Oh, Miss Everleigh! I have done my best to keep them amused."

"But they have been almost too much for you, have they, Julie? Come, children, did you ever play for—goose! Carol, this is Julie Streng, who has been so kind to come. See if you two can not devise something less noisy by the time the gentlemen arrive. I want this red-headed boy for the fox, and I will be the mother goose. Now, sir, get any of my goings away from me if you can."

The gentlemen had followed closer than was expected of them. They came in before the noisy game was over, while Miss Everleigh stood panting, flushed and heaved in the midst of her clamorous throng.

"You got the idea of what is expected of you now," she said, laughingly. "Mr. Childer, I intend to shakedown you, and you have a turn at being pulled about. No wry faces, sir, but do your duty like a man."

Almost before he knew it, he was in the midst of the fun and frolic. Mr. Ingot held aloof looking on superciliously and expressing his distaste for the whole affair to Carol when he got the chance.

"I don't like you to mix with such little beasts, my bonny. Talk of Miss Everleigh's pride! I don't see where it comes in to-night. To think of her gathering up such a rabble! I thought she said Borman could not come," with a change of unpleasant surprise in her voice. "Did you know he was expected, Carol?"

"No," she answered, turning hot and cold by turns, as she lifted her eyes slowly to see Norris entering. How could she meet him with the promise she had given her brother binding her! How could she bear Ingot's assertion of his claim which she was sure he would flaunt in the other's face?

Norris passed them with a quiet bow and approached Althea.

"I was so sorry to be obliged to decline your dinner invitation, but I am sorry to be so late. The evening was half over to make amends, if I am an awkward quantity, I can easily go again."

"I wish you would," she answered him, honestly. "I want after Carol, hoping you would come, but she has gone and engaged herself to that man. It isn't her fault; her brother is at the bottom of it, I know, but it will not be pleasant for either of you now. Come again to-morrow, I shall want to see you."

Norris bowed—he could not trust himself to speak—and withdrew as quietly as he came, leaving Lyman, who was out of sight at the moment, to the wiser for his presence on the scene.

Whatever trouble, of his own making, was closing around Lyman Childer, he had broken away from the shadow of it for that night.

He proved an invaluable assistant to Miss Everleigh, keeping her restless company engaged until the hour for dinner had arrived, when he made a little speech as he handed out the bag of sweets which made every child glad.

The old ladies had their donations of tea and tobacco, and Julie Streng found a soft, warm shawl placed over her shoulders wrap by Althea's hands.

The blessed Christmas day was at an end. Carol was relieved when her brother took the sleigh and driver, leaving Ingot to mount beside the driver on the way home. She gave him a grateful squeeze, and nestled close to him under the protecting robes. She thought she had seen the evidences of a better understanding between Althea and him that night, and in her own heart she was making a resolution to trust him implicitly, at any sacrifice to herself.

Ingot was satisfied for once to say good-night at the door. His bird was sacred; he could afford to let it flutter in the net which encompassed it.

Time enough to tame it when he had it fairly in his hand.

CHAPTER XIX.

ONOPHO IN THE DARK.

"She has gone and engaged herself to that man," said Althea, with some bitterness; and those words kept repeating themselves in the mind of Norris Borman through the liveliest night.

His heart had gone down with a sudden chill. He was depressed and unhappy, but yet not entirely without hope.

"Her brother is at the bottom of it," Althea had declared, and he believed it. Of herself, he felt sure, Carol would never turn to Ingot, and for the rest, marriage need not necessarily follow upon such an arrangement as might have been brought about by the co-operation of the two men.

No girl of spirit would be driven, and that Carol was of spirit, he knew, for he had not defied her brother when Lyman snubbed him, and closed the door in his face.

There was a cross to think that she had ever tolerated Ingot, but there was comfort in knowing that she, too, was unhappy. Her pale, drooping face had assured him of that.

Altogether, Norris might have suffered more than he did that night. He was like one who refuses to believe the ill tidings that come to him, and Althea did her best to keep up his spirits when he saw her again.

"I don't expect it to be of long standing," she said, "determined to get at the bottom of the whole affair, but, unfortunately, Carol was out. Don't look so blue, Norris. I shall go again to-morrow, and the day after, and so on, until I have succeeded in making you what that ogre of a brother means by badgering her late taking such a step. Depend on me to smooth the way for you to bring about an understanding of your own."

But Carol, Althea's cheerful, her powers. She did not see Carol when she called for the second time at the house, and on the third day Carol came to see her.

The girl was still pale, and quieter than before, but she was of her engagement quite as matter of course.

"I do not expect it to be of long standing," said she. "Mr. Ingot has already broached the subject of a speedy marriage, and while nothing is settled, I may say that I feel bound to yield to his wishes so far as I can."

"Are you really going to let this thing go, Carol? It will be the mistake of your life if you do. You are not deceiving me, are you? You are not deceiving me, are you? You are not deceiving me, are you?"

"No, I am not deceiving you," she said. "I am not deceiving you, are you? You are not deceiving me, are you? You are not deceiving me, are you?"

A TRIBUTE TO GRANT.

A Monumental Statue of the Hero Unveiled at St. Louis.

St. Louis, Oct. 29.—After three years of energetic work the task of the Grant Memorial Association is completed, and the new Grant monument in the center of Twelfth street, between Olive and Locust, was unveiled with impressive ceremonies at 3 p. m. The presentation address on behalf of the Grant Memorial Association was made by Henry C. Harstick, and Mayor Francis made remarks accepting the monument as a gift to the city.

The orator of the day was General John W. Nolan.

The statue is of heroic size and represents General Grant in full military uniform, wearing the stars of a general of the army. His army overcoat is thrown back from his shoulders, and he wears a military sash and a heavy spurred riding boot. A pair of field glasses hangs at his right side. He is represented watching a field of battle. He is left foot slightly advanced and his right hand rests on the hilt of his sheathed sword. The attitude is spirited, the suggestions inspiring and the likeness is pronounced by all who have seen it to be accurate.

The figure is bronze, nine feet six inches in height, and stands on a pedestal of granite. The base is a bronze plate with the words:

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

On the four sides of the pedestal are bas-reliefs of the great soldier, representing different epochs of his career. The statue faces the South and the whole suggestion is that of a hero who has won his way.

No sentiment with the statue. The statue is a simple, dignified, and heroic representation of the great soldier.

Washington, Oct. 23.—The Sioux hero split into two factions. More than fifty of the sixty-seven Indians here have signed a protest against the propositions of the Government. The rest have signed a letter of protest against the propositions of the Government.

CONCERNING THE HEALTH.

Never allow state flowers to remain in a sick room.

A patient hard work or close study within an hour after eating invites derangement of the digestive organs.

The human organism is a savings bank for the vital strength, and in the form of fresh air it accepts the smallest deposits.

Sanitary employments are less favorable to health than active ones, but a good posture can do much to help in this matter.

It is threatened with diphtheria the patient's throat should receive a dusting every few hours with four of sulphur, which may be administered in the form of a quill inserted into the throat.

A written in Table Talk urges the dyspeptic to learn to eat as a means of repelling and lubricating the weak stomach, a means which he declares to be more efficient than all the pills and medicinal draughts ever concocted.

Cold water should not be used for bathing at night or at any time when the body is overworked, as it is cooled from any cause. A warm or hot bath in the hottest weather is much more refreshing in its effects than a cold one, and is not open to the same objection.

A man who will keep a healthy man healthy might kill a sick man; and a diet sufficient to sustain a sick man would not keep a well man alive. Increased quantity of food, especially of liquids, does not mean increased nutrition, rather decrease, since the digestion is overtaxed and weakened.

Lactose acid, which is not far off from the beverage commonly termed buttermilk, has been doing people wonders. It is announced, a good many people who are "out of sorts" with liver troubles might try the buttermilk cure, without waiting for an illness to have it prescribed for them. Especially old people and worn out people, the lactose acid is a fountain of youth in the chills of the surplus.

A HUNDRED YEARS A HERO.

How Seth Warner Won a Wife and Became Famous.

Colonel Seth Warner, of Vermont, the famous hero of the revolutionary war, was a leading fighter for the lamp of liberty.

These titles were disputed by the State of New York, and its authorities obtained an edict of the King of England in their favor. The settlement of the dispute was the supposed injustice. This state of things brought Colonel Seth Warner to the front.

With Ethan Allen and others he actively opposed every effort of the New York State authorities to enforce the edict. He was, by the way, with Allen and others, were outlawed and a price put on their heads!

To circumvent New York, it was necessary that some one should go into that state and gain respect for the revolution. Col. Warner, assuming for safety the name of "Dr. Howard," undertook this perilous and romantic journey.

While on his way home he stopped at a country inn, where an old soldier and his daughter were storm-bound. The father fell ill and the daughter called upon Col. Warner, who, with his wife's knowledge of simple remedies, successfully treated the "old man," and he finally won this devoted woman for a wife.

Such incidents were not uncommon in those years. When the doctor was not easily reached, months of sickness, and even life were often lost. Col. Warner, a professional friend versed in the use of simple herbs and roots. The health of early settlers and their powers of endurance compared with those of the present day, and left no poison in the blood to work as much injury to the system as would the disease itself.

In time of peace the Colonel was in constant demand for his knowledge of simple remedies and their power over disease. But it was left to another of his name of the present age to give to the public what was then used with such positive success.

Warner's Log Cabin Balm is a preparation that has been used with such positive success. Warner's Log Cabin Balm is a preparation that has been used with such positive success.

Colonel Seth Warner belongs to a family of wide distinction; no less than eight members thereof won fame in the regular practice of medicine.

Looking to the adoption by the people of this generation of the old time simple remedies, his direct descendant, Dr. H. Warner, the well-known proprietor of the Warner's Log Cabin Balm, has been experimenting with old time roots and herbs formulae, and his search having been finally rewarded with success, he gives the world the result. These recipes are formulae for other days accomplished great things because they were purely vegetable and combined simply so as to cure the disease instead of poisoning the system.

A harmony with their old time character, we learn that in preparation to call them the Warner's Log Cabin remedies, using a trade-mark of old-fashioned American log cabin, without injury to the system.

We understand that he has been put forth as "a preparation of the blood," the sarsaparilla itself being but one of a number of simple and effective elements. "Log Cabin Balm" and "Warner's Log Cabin Balm" which are to be used in connection with other remedies, or independently as required.

Warner's safe remedies are already standard of the day, and are produced with value in all parts of the world, and we have no doubt the Log Cabin remedies, will be of equal merit, for Mr. Warner has the reputation of curing his name with no preparation that is not meritorious.

This type-writer has finished much bad writing, but it will overcome the bad spelling.—N. O. Peckham.
